"Suffering That I Can Help."

By DR. BERTHOLD A. BAER.

No one is exempt from sorrow.

Suffering is the indispensable complement of human life.

"If everything is doubtful, the suffering that I can help is certain," wrote George Eliot.

This thought, underlying the founding of the "Fifth Avenue Memorial," 40 West 57th Street, New York's Institution for Burial and Cremation.

Whether the service is held at the "Memorial" or at the home of the deceased, we relieve those left behind of much mental anguish, for we make the last rites memories of hope and of a life well lived, instead of sorrow and despair.

It is the mission of the "Fifth Avenue Memorial" to assist the living to honor the dead.

A. T. Hert Dies As He Confers With Party Aids

Republican Committeeman From Kentucky Succumbs to Apoplexy While Holding Patronage Parley

In Washington for Meeting

Had Been Mentioned for Important Offices and Was Strong Harding Backer

From The Tribune's Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, June 7.—In the midst of a patronage discussion with Republican Congressmen and leaders from Kentucky, Alvin Tobias Hert, National Committeeman from the Blue Grass State and better known as "Tobe" Hert, died of apoplexy this afternoon. The Kentucky leader had not felt well this morning and so had remained in bed. He did not regard his illness as serious, however, and was having a conference with four of his lieutenants when, practically without warning, the end came at 4:15 o'clock.

Mr. Hert arrived in Washington to attend the meeting to-morrow of the Republican National Committee, on which he had represented Kentucky since 1916. He had a conference with Senator Ernst yesterday, shortly after his arrival. In his last post-mortem on politics he was conferring with Representatives Langley and Robinson, and with Chilton, of Louisville, and E. T. Frank, of Owensboro, Kentucky. Mrs. Hert was in Louisville.

Won Prominence in 1916

Tobe Hert, as he was affectionately known by practically every Republican politician from Maine to California, sprang into national prominence in 1916, when he became a member of the national committee. In that year he was in charge of Western headquarters and caused much amusement among the old timers by his enthusiasm. He insisted that he would carry Kentucky for Hughes, and was also optimistic about other border states, including Oklahoma.

In the 1919 election he demonstrated that this had been a possibility by carrying the state for Governor Morrow, and last fall he carried the state for Ernst, as Senator, by a comfortable majority. Losing the electoral vote by a very narrow margin.

At the Chicago convention a year ago, flushed with the gubernatorial victory and in absolute control of the twenty-six delegates from Kentucky, Hert looked as one of the big political forces. He formed a fast alliance with Jake Haman, whose control of the twenty delegates from Oklahoma was just as strong as Hert's was of Kentucky.

Both were for Lowden when the convention opened, discouraged, on the surface at least, by the Moore and Goldstein disclosures which had convinced many of the Eastern leaders that Lowden would not do. No single individual was more forceful in the nomination of Harding by backers of Hert when, on the last day of the convention, Hert refused to join the opposition leaders in a move to force a adjournment over Sunday. This move by Hert is believed to have made the nomination of Harding certain.

Special Dispatch to The Tribune

LOUISVILLE, Ky., June 7.—Alvin T. Hert was born April 8, 1865, in Owensburg, Ind., a son of William and Isabelle Hert. He was educated in the common schools of his native town. He was active in Republican party affairs for many years, having been prominent in the organization in Indiana prior to his moving to Louisville. He was at one time superintendent of the Indiana Reformatory in Jeffersonville.

Since 1904 Mr. Hert has been president of the American Cretaceous Company, a geological company in the United States. He amassed a fortune in the business and was reported to be worth many millions.

He married Miss Sallie Aleay, daughter of C. and Susan L. Aleay, of Bedford, Ind.

W. B. Harrison, 50 Years New York Lawyer, Dies

William Benjamin Harrison, for many years a prominent lawyer of this city, died yesterday at his residence here. He was in his ninety-seventh year and had been recognized as the oldest living alumnus of Columbia University. He was graduated there in 1846, was admitted to the New York bar two years later and then began the practice of his profession, in which he engaged for a full half century.

For many years senior member of the law firm of Harrison, Waring & Russell, Mr. Harrison later engaged in practice privately until 1900, at which time he was forced to retire, owing to failing eyesight. For the last fifteen years he had been practically blind and during the last few years had gradually declined in health.

Mr. Harrison was a direct descendant of Francis Henry Harrison, who came to this country from England in 1708, and his grandfather, Richard Harrison, a learned scholar and jurist of Colonial days, was appointed by President Washington as United States District Attorney for New York. Mr. Harrison was the son of Francis Ludlow Harrison. His wife died in 1896.
